ABSTRACT

There are many Federal laws against discrimination, passed to protect people who are denied their rights because of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, age, or disability. This publication is a guide to the initial stages of filing a discrimination complaint. Although it does not cover all the steps after a complaint is filed, it helps the person who has been discriminated against determine the agency to which a complaint should be directed. Where and when to file a complaint is addressed for the following areas of discrimination: (1) credit; (2) education; (3) employment; (4) housing; (5) law enforcement; (6) federally assisted programs; (7) public accommodations and facilities; and (8) voting. Special circumstances for noncitizens, Native Americans, institutionalized people, and military personnel are outlined. Any program or activity that received funds from the Department of Education must operate in a nondiscriminatory manner. No educational institution receiving such funds can discriminate on the basis of race, color, national origin, sex, disability, or age to deny a service or benefit afforded others, provide inferior service, or segregate an individual on the basis of race, color, or national origin. Individuals may be segregated by sex for contact sports or varsity athletics or by disability when it is absolutely necessary. Other conditions for which separation for some characteristic is allowed are outlined. The U.S. Department of Education's Office of Civil Rights and its Assistant Secretary for the Office of Special Education and Rehabilitative Services are cited as primary sources to which complaints may be directed. Other agencies are listed for particular kinds of discrimination. (SLD)

U.S. Commission on Civil Rights

The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights is an independent, bipartisan agency first established by Congress in 1957 and reestablished in 1983. It is directed to:

- Investigate complaints alleging that citizens are being deprived of their right to vote by reason of their race, color, religion, sex, age, disability, or national origin, or by reason of fraudulent practices;
- Study and collect information relating to discrimination or a denial of equal protection of the laws under the Constitution because of race, color, religion, sex, age, disability, or national origin, or in the administration of justice;
- Appraise Federal laws and policies with respect to discrimination or denial of equal protection of the laws because of race, color, religion, sex, age, disability, or national origin, or in the administration of justice;
- Serve as a national clearinghouse for information in respect to discrimination or denial of equal protection of the laws because of race, color, religion, sex, age, disability, or national origin;
- Submit reports, findings, and recommendations to the President and Congress;
- Issue public service announcements to discourage discrimination or denial of equal protection of the laws.

1. Introduction

There are many Federal laws against discrimination. They were passed to protect people who, because of their race, color, religion, sex, national origin, age, or disability, are denied their rights.

Discrimination might occur when an individual tries to vote; rent, or buy a home; use a public facility; get a job, an education, or a bank loan, or do many other things.

Discrimination is treating one person differently than another because of a particular characteristic. Not all kinds of different treatment are illegal or even unfair; for example, States allow only their own residents to vote in State elections.

Discrimination is illegal when it is based on:

- race, which is generally understood to be membership in a racial group. Depending on which law is involved, membership in an ethnic group can also constitute race;
- color, which refers to a person's actual skin shade, and may constitute a separate discrimination factor regardless of the person's race;
- sex, which refers to gender;
- religion, which refers to a person's religious beliefs and practices, or lack thereof, or a person's membership in a religious group;
- national origin, which refers to an individual's country of origin, the origin of an individual's ancestors, or the physical, cultural, or linguistic characteristics of a particular nationality. This includes characteristics such as last name, accent, and cultural heritage;
- age, which refers to persons age 40 or over; or
- disability, which refers to physical or mental impairments that substantially limit one or more major life activity of an individual.

If you believe that you have been discriminated against and want to file a complaint with the Federal Government, this publication is intended to help you.

This publication will help you review your rights and guide you through the initial step of filing a discrimination complaint; it will not inform you of all the steps involved in successfully pursuing the complaint after you have filed it. If you seek a detailed description of the overall process beyond this initial step, further information can be obtained by contacting the Federal, State, and local officials or one or more of the organizations listed in this publication.

How do you make out a complaint? Where do you send it?

Before you bring a discrimination complaint you should take steps to obtain more information from:

- trained legal counsel;
- Federal, State, and local officials;
- public service organizations referenced in a section of this publication.

States, counties, and municipalities also have laws against discrimination, which sometimes provide different protection or relief. If they have laws that apply, you can file a complaint with them instead of, or in addition to, filing one with the Federal Government. The Federal Government has arrangements with some State and local governments to refer certain kinds of complaints to them.

Among the Federal laws which require people to be treated equally are the Civil Rights Acts of 1964 and 1991, the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990, the Voting Rights Act of 1965, the Equal Credit Opportunity Act, the Equal Educational Opportunities Act of 1974, the Individuals With Disabilities Act, the Equal Pay Act of 1963, the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967, the Age Discrimination Act of 1975, the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, the Community Reinvestment Act of 1977, the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986, the Fair Housing Act of 1968, the Family and Medical Leave Act of 1993, and Executive Order 11246 (1965) as amended by Executive Order 11375 (1967).

Many Federal agencies are responsible for enforcing these laws and the regulations in place to implement them. Sometimes the government must get a specific complaint from an individual before it can act against an individual or organization that violates people's rights. Because laws and regulations frequently require that complaints be filed within certain time limits, It is important to file as soon as possible after the discriminatory act occurs.

The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights (USCCR) has no power to enforce laws and, hence, cannot resolve individual complaints of discrimination. After reading this publication, if you are still uncertain what agency you should contact to file a complaint of discrimination, you may write to us at the following address and we can assist you by referring your case to the appropriate agency:

You may also write to the appropriate USCCR regional office. See page 105.

2. How to File a Complaint

Your complaint should be in writing, preferably typed or printed neatly, dated, signed, and should include the following information:

- your name;
- your address, and your home and work telephone numbers;
- the name(s) and address(es) of the person(s) and/or establishment you believe to have discriminated against you;
- a description of the act(s) of discrimination. This should include the date and place of the action(s), and what you believe to be the basis for discrimination (race, sex, etc.); and
- the name(s), address(es) and telephone number(s) of any person(s) with information concerning your complaint.

When your complaint is investigated, you may be asked to provide copies of receipts, contracts, or other records supporting your claim of discrimination. Any materials that you would want returned should not be sent with your initial complaint.

Generally, most government agencies require that complaints be postmarked within 180 days of the discriminatory action. You should, however, inquire about specific deadlines that may apply to your case. Depending on your type of case or your status, you may be required to file your complaint earlier.

3. When and Where to File a Complaint

Some agencies handle complaints only at their Washington, DC, headquarters; others process them through regional or local offices. Some handle them at both places. For more details, take note of any special instructions regarding the filing of complaints at the specific agencies listed throughout this publication.

Credit

Federal laws such as the Equal Credit Opportunity Act of 1974 and the Fair Housing Act of 1968, as amended, prohibit discrimination in providing credit or credit-related services. Both laws prohibit discrimination in residential real estate transactions, and the Equal Credit Opportunity Act also prohibits discrimination in consumer and business or commercial loans. In all credit transactions you are protected from discrimination because of your race, color, religion, sex, marital status, age (provided the applicant has the capacity to contract), national origin, receipt of public assistance, or because you have exercised a right under the Consumer Credit Protection Act. In credit transactions related to housing you are also protected from discrimination because of family status or disability. According to these laws, when you apply for credit a creditor may not:

- discourage you from applying;
- ask you to reveal your sex, race, national origin, or religion. A creditor may ask you voluntarily to disclose this information if you are applying for a home loan. A creditor may also ask what your residence or immigration status is;
- ask whether you are divorced or widowed;
- ask what your marital status is if you are applying for individual, unsecured credit, unless you live in a community property state;
- ask you for information about your husband or wife. A creditor may ask about your spouse, or former spouse, if: your spouse is applying with you; your spouse will be allowed to use the account; you are relying on your spouse's income or on alimony or child support income from a former spouse; or if you reside in a community property state;
- ask about your plans for having or rearing children; or

- ask if you receive alimony, child support, or separate maintenance payments.

When deciding whether to give you credit a creditor may not:

- consider your sex, marital status, race, color, national origin, or religion;
- consider the race of the people who live in the neighborhood where you want to buy, or improve, a house with borrowed money; or
- consider your age unless you are too young to sign a binding contract, generally under 18 years of age, or if the information is to be used to see whether your income will be reduced with retirement.

When evaluating your income, a creditor may not:

- refuse to consider public assistance income, alimony, child support, or separate maintenance payments if that income is received consistently;
- discount income because of your sex or marital status or on any basis for which discrimination is prohibited;
- discount or refuse to consider income derived from pension, annuity, or retirement benefits programs;
- discount or refuse to consider income derived from part-time employment, but you may have to show that this income can be expected to continue.

You also have the right to:

- have the credit in your birth name, your first name and your spouse's last name, or your first name and combined last names;
- get credit without a cosigner, if you meet the creditor's standards;
- have a cosigner other than your husband or wife, if one is necessary;
- keep your own account after you change your name, marital status, reach a certain age, or retire, unless the creditor has evidence that you are unable or unwilling to pay;
- know within 30 days of filing your application whether it has been accepted or rejected;

- know specifically why an application was rejected, since indefinite and vague reasons are illegal; or
- learn the specific reasons why you were offered less favorable terms than you applied for; and
- receive copies of appraisal reports for credit that is to be secured by a dwelling.

If you believe you have been discriminated against by a bank, savings and loan association, credit union, farm credit system institution, store, or other creditor:

- in being discouraged from applying for credit or a loan;
- in being given unfair terms for credit or a loan; or
- in being denied credit or a loan;

write to the agency in charge of enforcing the equal credit practices of that lender.

A creditor must give you the name and address of the appropriate enforcement agency when it turns down the terms you request or denies you credit. If a lender does not offer you this information or refuses to give it to you, write to the appropriate agency in the list that follows. These agencies may not resolve individual complaints, but they will use consumer comments to decide which companies to investigate.

You should also complain if you think a lender is "redlining"—refusing to make loans, or setting different conditions for loans, on property in a community because of the area's racial, religious, or ethnic population. When certain financial institutions try to get approval from their regulatory agency to:

- obtain Federal deposit insurance;
- establish a facility authorized to receive deposits, or relocate an existing office;
- merge or consolidate with, or acquire another institution;
- acquire deposits from another institution; or
- form a bank or savings association holding company;

individuals and community groups have an opportunity to comment on whether the institution is redlining as an objection to its approval for the proposed transaction. You can request the regulatory agency to place you on its mailing list so you are aware of the comment period for:

- a nationally chartered bank (National or N.A. will be part of the name). Write to one of the district offices of the Comptroller of the Currency listed on page 61. For publications or additional information contact:

Education

According to Federal laws that prohibit discrimination because of race, color, national origin, sex, age, or disability in programs that receive Federal financial assistance, any program or activity that receives funds from the Department of Education must operate in a nondiscriminatory manner.

Any educational or other institution or facility that receives Federal financial assistance may not discriminate on the basis of race, color, national origin, sex, disability, or age so as to:

- deny you or your child aid, a service, or a benefit afforded others;
- provide you or your child an inferior service;
- segregate you or your child on the basis of race, color, or national origin;
- segregate you or your child on the basis of sex, other than for contact sports or varsity athletic competition, or segregate you or your child on the basis of disability where such segregation is not educationally necessary;

- deny admission to schools or postsecondary institutions on the basis of race, color, national origin, or age, or generally, on the basis of sex except with regard to admission to religious undergraduate institutions;
- engage in conduct that has the effect of denying you or your child aid, a service, or a benefit, or otherwise discriminating against you or your child;
- deny or restrict you or your child's access to elementary, secondary, or vocational education because you are, or your child is, limited-English-proficient;
- or otherwise treat you or your child adversely on the basis of race, color, national origin, sex, disability, or age.

Schools may not discriminate against students because of pregnancy, parenthood, or marital status. Such discrimination includes barring a student from classes or extracurricular activities or expelling the student.

In sports, schools must provide equivalent treatment, services, and benefits to students of both sexes.

Civil rights laws protecting individuals from discrimination in programs (all activities of an institution) that receive Federal funds extend to all State educational agencies, elementary and secondary school systems, colleges and universities, vocational schools, proprietary schools, State vocational rehabilitation agencies, libraries, and museums that receive Federal financial assistance.

These programs may include, but are not limited to, admissions, recruitment, financial aid, academic programs, student treatment and services, counseling and guidance, discipline, classroom assignment, grading, vocational education, recreation, physical education, athletics, housing, and employment.

Federal antidiscrimination laws apply to the entire program even if the Federal assistance affects only a small portion of the program.

If you think you or your child has been discriminated against by a public school, college or university, or a private school, college, or university that receives Federal financial assistance, you may file a formal complaint against the institution receiving Federal funds with the appropriate regional office of the Office for Civil Rights (OCR) of the U.S. Department of Education, listed on page 62 or with:

U.S. Department of Education
Office for Civil Rights
330 C St., SW, Suite 5000
Washington, DC 20202
(202) 205-5413
1-800-421-3481
Fax: (202) 205-5381

The person or organization filing the complaint need not be a victim of the alleged discrimination, but may complain on behalf of another person or group.

The complaint must be filed within 180 calendar days of the date of the alleged discrimination, unless the time for filing is extended by OCR for good cause. Your formal complaint should include the information outlined in chapter 2, and also state whether you think a whole group of students or teachers is being discriminated against.

Certain complaints should also be sent to the U.S. Attorney General, who may bring suit after receiving a written and signed complaint from:

- a parent (or group of parents), stating that his or her child is one of a group being discriminated against by a school board; or
- an individual, or his or her parent, stating that he or she has been denied admission to or dismissed from a public college, university, or post-secondary vocational or technical school because of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.

These complaints should be sent to:

U.S. Department of Justice
Civil Rights Division
Educational Opportunities Section
PO Box 65958
Washington, DC 20035-5958
(202) 514-4092
Fax: (202) 514-8337

If you think you or your child has been discriminated against by a nonprofit private school that is exempt from Federal income tax, you should write to the nearest key district office of the Internal Revenue Service (IRS), listed on page 85, or to IRS headquarters in Washington, DC, at the following address. IRS can revoke the tax exemption of a private school that has a racially discriminatory policy, which includes discrimination on the basis of color and national or ethnic origin.

If you think your child has been discriminated against because of race, color, or national origin by a vocational, technical, elementary, or secondary school that is privately owned, operated for profit, and not run by a hospital, you should write to:

U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs
Office of Equal Opportunity
810 Vermont Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20420
(202) 482-6725

Fax: (202) 482-6761

VA can act if it pays benefits for any veteran enrolled at the school or otherwise assists that school, even if the person discriminated against is not a veteran.

In addition, Federal laws require that public schools provide a free, appropriate public education to children with disabilities. If you believe that your local school system has failed to identify your child's disability, incorrectly identified your child as an individual with a disability, failed to provide an appropriate educational program for your child, failed to carry out the program established for your child, or has unnecessarily separated your child from other children for all or part of the school day, your child may have rights under one or more of the Federal laws that govern the education of children with disabilities.

School systems must have formal procedures for identifying, evaluating, and establishing educational programs for children with disabilities. They must also offer a hearing when the parent and school officials disagree whether the program established for a child is appropriate.

Also, if you believe that your child's civil rights were violated because of a failure to follow proper procedures for identifying, evaluating, or placing a student with a disability, or because of a failure to carry out the provisions of your child's educational plan, or were otherwise violated because of discrimination based on disability, you may file a complaint by writing to the Department of Education, Office for Civil Rights listed on page 13.

Employment

Various Federal laws protect you from discrimination in employment on the basis of race, color, sex, religion, national origin, age, or disability. Discrimination by employers with 15 or more employees is prohibited in all aspects of the hiring and employment process: job application, hiring, firing, promoting, training, wage earning, or any other terms, privileges, or conditions of employment provided or imposed by the employer.

If you believe that you have been discriminated against on any of these bases, you should contact the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) at:

Race and Color

You cannot be denied equal employment opportunity because of your racial group or skin shade, or because you associate with members of some racial group.

National Origin

You cannot be denied equal employment opportunity because of your birthplace, ancestry, or culture, or because you have some intimate association with a specific ethnic group, such as marriage or a shared place of worship.

Likewise, you cannot be denied equal employment opportunity because of your accent or manner of speaking. If an employer believes that an English proficiency rule is critical for business purposes, he or she must inform you of the rule and the consequences of its violation before applying the rule to you.

Religion

You cannot be denied equal employment opportunity because of your religious practices or beliefs. Religious practices include the exercise of moral and ethical beliefs held with the strength of religious beliefs. If you think your employer has a work requirement (such as a dress code or a work schedule that conflicts with your Sabbath observance) that interferes with your religious practices or beliefs, you must inform him or her of what reasonable accommodations can be provided to suit your needs. The employer is obligated to try to accommodate your religious practices unless doing so would create an undue hardship on the operation of the business.

Sex

You cannot be denied equal employment opportunity because of your gender.

• Equal Pay

It is illegal for an employer to pay you wages at a rate less than the rate of wages paid to employees of the opposite sex for equal work on jobs that require equal skill, effort, and responsibility and are performed under similar working conditions unless a pay differential is warranted by a seniority system, a merit system, a system that measures earnings by quantity or quality of production, or is based on a factor other than gender.

• Pregnancy

You cannot be denied equal employment opportunity because of pregnancy, childbirth, or related medical conditions. Any health insurance provided by an employer must cover expenses for pregnancy related conditions on the same basis as costs for other medical conditions. Leave for child care should be granted on the same basis as leave granted to employees for other nonmedical reasons, such as nonjob-related travel or education, and should be available to both men and women.

Harassment

Hostile or abusive verbal or physical conduct based on race, color, sex, religion, national origin, age, or disability is unlawful if it is sufficiently severe or pervasive to create an intimidating, hostile, or offensive working environment.

Disability

If you have a disability, the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) protects you from employment discrimination. The ADA prohibits employers with 15 or more employees from:

- discriminating against you on the basis of physical or mental disability;
- asking you to take medical exams before making a conditional job offer;
- asking you questions about your disability before making a conditional job offer;
- denying you health or other fringe benefits that are provided to other employees; and
- placing you in a job situation that limits your opportunities or status.

If you are able to perform the essential functions of the job with or without reasonable accommodation, the employer has to provide you with reasonable accommodations for your disability, as long as such accommodations do not impose an undue hardship on the operations of the enterprise. An employer may not ask interview questions about your disabilities; inquiries should be about your skills related to the job.

For more information regarding workplace discrimination against people with disabilities, contact the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission listed on page 15.

Age

If you are 40 years of age or older, it is illegal for an employer with 20 or more employees to:

- discriminate against you in your compensation or terms, conditions, or privileges of employment based on your age;
- classify or segregate you, or limit your activities so you are deprived of job opportunities or adversely affected in employment status;
- discriminate against you in the operation of a seniority system;
- with certain narrow exceptions, discriminate against you with respect to employee benefit plans, fringe benefits, or pension benefits.

It is also illegal for an employer to indicate an age preference or limitation in notices or advertisements for employment unless age is a genuine job qualification.

Classifications and preferences based on age have been allowed only in narrow circumstances, generally in jobs involving public safety. To justify unequal treatment, the employer must show that age is a genuine qualification of the job and that there is no other course of action that would achieve his or her goals with a less discriminatory impact.

For more information regarding age discrimination in the workplace, contact the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission on page 15.

Family and Medical Leave

Under the Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA), you are entitled to a maximum of 12 weeks of unpaid leave during a 12-month period if you work for an employer who has had at least 50 employees during the current or preceding year, you have worked for the employer for at least 12 months, and you have worked at least 1,250 hours in the 12-month period before the leave starts. You must also work at a particular work site where there are at least 50 employees within a 75-mile radius. During the leave, the employer must continue to provide group health benefits on the same basis that such benefits are provided when you are at work. The employer must also restore you to the same or an equivalent position when you are ready to return to work. Leave may be taken for the birth and care of a new child, for placement for adoption or foster care of a child with you, to care for your spouse, child, or a parent who has a serious health condition, or if you must be absent due to your serious health condition. You may elect or the employer may require you to use accrued paid leave during such periods. FMLA leave may also run concurrently with workers' compensation leaves or leaves covered by short or long term disability policies. Employers may not refuse leave, interfere with use of leave, or in any way discriminate against someone who has used leave. The FMLA protects men and women equally and is enforced by the U.S. Department of Labor. The Federal law does not supersede more generous provisions included in State laws, collective bargaining agreements, or employers' policies. Any less generous provision in such laws, agreements, or policies are, however, superseded by FMLA provisions.

If you feel that your rights under family or medical leave have been violated, you may file a complaint with the local office of the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor or you may initiate private action. The address and telephone number of the local office can be found in telephone directories for large cities under U.S. Department of Labor, Employment Standards Administration, Wage and Hour Division. If you cannot locate this information, contact the regional office of the Wage and Hour Division, listed on page 73, or headquarters listed below.

If you file a complaint with the Wage and Hour Division, the Division will attempt to resolve your complaint administratively by contacting your employer on your behalf. If these efforts fail, the Division may attempt to litigate on your behalf, depending on the facts and circumstances. If you elect private legal action, the Division will not participate. To file a complaint or for more information regarding FMLA, contact:

Immigration Status

If you are an employee hired after November 6, 1986, your employer must be able to prove that you are legally authorized to work in the United States and will ask you to present documentation showing that you have work authorization. However, an employer cannot single you out to require employment verification because you are of a particular national origin group or you appear to be foreign. Neither can an employer require that you be a U.S. citizen, or generally give those who are U.S. citizens a preference in hiring or employment opportunities, unless there are legal or contractual requirements that mandate he or she do so. It is illegal for an employer to discriminate against legal aliens merely because they look foreign or are not citizens or because they have a particular type of work authorization.

Under immigration law, individuals who charge discrimination on the basis of national origin against employers with 4 to 14 employees or on the basis of citizenship status against employers with 4 or more employees should file with the Office of Special Counsel for Immigration Related Unfair Employment Practices in the Department of Justice. Whatever your characteristic, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) is the agency of the Federal government with the mission of protecting you from job discrimination. If you think you have been discriminated against because of race, color, sex, religion, national origin, age, or disability:

- by an employer in being hired or tested for a job, in being promoted or fired, in work opportunities or conditions, in pay or benefits, or in apprenticeship or training programs,
- by a labor union in its apprenticeship or training programs, hiring hall procedures, or membership requirements, or
- by an employment agency, including State employment services, in its job testing, referrals, or fees, write or phone the nearest office of EEOC listed on page 77. The office will give you instructions and forms for filing a charge.

Charges must be filed within 180 or 300 days of the discriminatory act. In States or localities without an antidiscrimination law, charges must be filed with EEOC within 180 days of the discriminatory act. In States or localities where there is an antidiscrimination law and an agency authorized to grant or seek relief, charges must be filed with EEOC within 300 days of the discriminatory act. The local EEOC office can tell you what procedures and time limits apply to your charge.

Although EEOC prefers that its forms be used, it will accept a complaint filed in the form of a letter containing your name and address and that of the employer, union, or employment office you think has discriminated. You must date the letter and briefly explain what the discriminatory act was and when it occurred.

Contact one of the district offices of EEOC listed on page 77 or EEOC headquarters:

Equal Employment Opportunity Commission

(202) 663-4900
TDD: 1-800-800-3302
TDD: (202) 663-4494

If EEOC does not act within 180 days of the filing of your complaint, you may request a right-to-sue letter from EEOC and file a private lawsuit in Federal district court. You have only 90 days to file a lawsuit after you receive a right-to-sue letter. If the discrimination complaint deals with equal pay you do not have to file a charge with EEOC before filing a lawsuit. The Department of Justice (DOJ) is responsible for employment discrimination litigation involving State and local governments. The EEOC will refer requests for right to sue letters involving public employers to the DOJ which will issue the letter.

A presidential order (Executive Order 11246) also forbids employment discrimination on the basis of race, color, national origin, sex, or religion by companies that hold contracts or subcontracts with the Federal Government and by firms working on construction projects that receive Federal funds. In addition, the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, as amended, forbids employment discrimination on the basis of disability by companies that hold contracts or subcontracts with the Federal Government. Employers holding contracts or subcontracts with the Federal Government are also barred from discriminating against qualified disabled veterans and veterans of the Vietnam era. If you think an employer who has discriminated against you holds a contract with a Federal agency, contact the Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs (OFCCP), Department of Labor listed below, or one of the OFCCP regional offices listed on page 70.

U.S. Department of Labor
Employment Standards Administration
Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs
200 Constitution Ave., NW, Room C3310
Washington, DC 20210
(202) 219-9475
Fax: (202) 219-6195

Complaints must be filed within 180 days of the date of the alleged discrimination, unless an OFCCP director extends it for a good reason. If your complaint is an individual complaint of discrimination against an employer, it will probably be referred to EEOC. If it is one of systemic discrimination or if there are several complaints, or if many other persons are also affected by a pattern and practice of discrimination, the Labor Department will generally take the lead in processing the complaint.

OFCCP also has an ombudsperson who receives and investigates complaints made by individuals alleging abuse by OFCCP staff in the processing of discrimination complaints or conduct of compliance reviews. The ombudsperson can be reached by telephone on (303) 844-1210 or Fax (303) 844-1213.

If you are a Federal employee, or an applicant for Federal employment, and think you have been discriminated against, contact the equal employment director of the agency involved within 45 days of the alleged discrimination. That person will provide information about filing a complaint. If the agency rules against you, you should ask the equal employment opportunity director what appeal rights you have and what the time limits are for filing an appeal.

If your complaint concerns an action that may be appealed to the Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB), such as being fired, you must include the discrimination issues as part of your appeal to MSPB, which must be filed within 20 days, or you must raise these issues separately in your agency's EEO administrative process. The EEO administrative process differs when a personnel action can be appealed to MSPB from when it cannot; therefore, you must request your EEO counselor to provide you with information about the differences. The MSPB complaint forms can be obtained from your agency, the regional office of the Merit Systems Protection Board listed on page 86, or the Office of the Clerk of MSPB by writing to:

U.S. Merit Systems Protection Board
Clerk of the Board
1120 Vermont Ave., NW

1-800-209-8960
TDD: (202) 653-8896
Fax: (202) 653-7130

If you are a Federal employee entitled to use a negotiated grievance procedure that covers the alleged discrimination, you may elect to file a grievance pursuant to the negotiated procedure in your collective bargaining agreement or to file an EEO complaint, but not both.

It is a prohibited personnel practice to discriminate against a Federal employee or an applicant for Federal employment on the basis of race, color, national origin, religion, sex, age, disability, marital status, or political affiliation. Though the Office of Special Counsel generally defers to the agency's EEO program, you may file a discrimination complaint with:

If you are an employee of a State or local government, an employment discrimination complaint on the basis of race, color, national origin, religion, sex, disability, or age may be filed with EEOC. EEOC may defer resolution of your complaint to the State or local fair employment practices agency depending on the terms of a particular work-sharing agreement. The Employment Litigation Section of the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice sues State and local government employers who discriminate in employment on the grounds of race, national origin, sex, or religion. EEOC will refer such cases and disability cases in which it appears that discrimination has occurred to the Department of Justice for litigation consideration, if conciliation has failed. If you think you have been discriminated against by a State or local government and wish to file a charge, write to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, listed on page 15.

EEOC may sue the State or local government in cases involving age discrimination and sex-based pay discrimination.

If you think you have been discriminated against by a State employment service (although its actions are also covered by EEOC), unemployment benefits office, or by Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA) job training or public service employment programs, you should write to the appropriate regional office of the Department of Labor. For addresses see page 75. If you think you have been discriminated against by an apprenticeship program registered with the Department of Labor or a State apprenticeship agency, write to:

If you think you have been discriminated against by a job training center that receives Federal assistance, write to the appropriate Federal agency. For example, the Department of Veterans Affairs can act if it pays benefits for any veteran enrolled at the school, or otherwise assists the school, even if the person discriminated against is not a veteran.

If you think you have been discriminated against by a criminal justice agency that is receiving Federal funds from the Office of Justice Programs, you may write to:

Numerous other Federal agencies, such as the Department of Agriculture, the Federal Communications Commission, the Treasury Department, the Securities and Exchange Commission, and the Environmental Protection Agency, enforce statutes that contain prohibitions against discrimination by particular groups of employers. In almost all cases, EEOC also has jurisdiction. An individual's rights and remedies may differ from agency to agency. It may be to your advantage to contact all involved agencies you think may enforce laws covering your situation so that you can make an informed decision as to the most appropriate agency with which to file a complaint.

EEOC is responsible for coordinating Federal enforcement of laws against employment discrimination. In addition, its Office of Equal Employment Opportunity works with all Federal agencies in developing more effective procedures and uniform standards for handling complaints and insuring compliance with employment discrimination laws. If you believe a complaint filed with another agency has not been properly handled, you should write to:

Housing

Discrimination in the sale or rental of housing on the basis of race, color, national origin, religion, sex, disability, or family status (having children) is illegal. On such a basis, it is illegal to:

- refuse to rent or sell housing;
- refuse to negotiate for housing;
- make housing unavailable;
- deny housing;
- set different terms, conditions, or privileges for the sale or rental of a dwelling, or provide different services or facilities in connection with the sale or rental;
- falsely deny that housing is available for inspection, sale, or rental;
- engage in blockbusting practices by persuading owners to sell or rent by telling them that minorities are moving into a neighborhood;
- deny anyone access to or membership in a facility or service related to the sale or rental of housing, such as membership in multiple listing services or real estate brokers' organizations;
- make, print, or publish, or cause to be made, printed, or published any notice, statement, or advertisement indicating any preference, limitation, or discrimination with respect to the sale or rental of a dwelling;
- discriminate in the making or purchasing of loans or providing other financial services for a dwelling, including making available property insurance;

- discriminate in the appraising of residential property; or
- refuse to permit reasonable alterations to make a dwelling accessible for disabled tenants, or to provide reasonable accommodations for equal opportunity to enjoy the dwelling.

If you think you have been discriminated against:

- in trying to buy or rent a house or apartment;
- in getting a housing loan (see also the section on credit);
- in seeking real estate broker services;

or if you wish to complain about advertisements that say housing is available only to persons of a certain race, color, national origin, sex, or religion, you may file a complaint with the nearest Fair Housing Enforcement Center of the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) listed on page 67 or with:

For more information about how to file a complaint or to obtain forms call the Fair Housing Clearinghouse at 1-800-343-3442.

You may file suit, at your expense, in Federal District Court or State court. You may bring suit even after filing a complaint, if you have not signed a conciliation agreement and an administrative law judge has not started a hearing. You must file suit within 2 years of the alleged discriminatory action.

Finally, you may file a complaint with the U.S. Department of Justice, which may step in if a pattern or practice of discrimination appears to exist, or if the denial of rights to a group of persons raises an important public issue. Send the complaint to:

Neither HUD nor the Justice Department has authority to act in some instances of discrimination, such as those that occur in the sale or rental of a single-family home by a private individual who owns three or fewer such units and does not advertise or use a broker, or in the rental of a room or apartment in a dwelling containing four or fewer units, if the owner lives in one of them.

Law Enforcement

Federal criminal civil rights law prohibits law enforcement agents from conspiring to interfere with federally protected rights, depriving rights under color of law, or using or conspiring to use force, or threat of force, to interfere with the free exercise of your civil rights.

If you are a victim of gender-motivated violence in which the level of violence under State or Federal law constitutes a felony, there is a Federal, civil remedy under the Violence Against Women Act of 1994. To make use of this remedy it is not required that charges be filed or there be a conviction. Unlike other civil rights actions, this action is not brought by the government, but by the private individual through an attorney.

Prisoners

The constitutional rights of inmates are very limited. Prisoners' rights that are protected are:

- a right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment, which is usually construed to mean the infliction of unnecessary and unrestricted pain; and
- a right to exercise religious beliefs. Prisoners must be allowed the opportunity to pray and to meet with other inmates to worship within a group. Even individuals in disciplinary detention are entitled to pray and read religious texts.

Also, the Equal Protection Clause of the 14th amendment to the Constitution requires that the conditions of women's prisons must be equal to the conditions under which male prisoners are held, and vice versa.

If you are confined to a Federal Bureau of Prisons institution and believe you have been discriminated against by the institution, you should file a formal written complaint at the institution within 15 days of the incident. Extensions of time will be granted where there is a valid reason for the delay. You should follow the internal grievance procedure unless you think that your complaint is such that you might be adversely affected if the nature of the complaint became known within the institution, in which case you may file the complaint with the appropriate Regional Director of the Bureau of Prisons (for addresses, see page 60). Your complaint should include an explanation of why you have chosen to file with the Regional Director. If the complaint alleges that your health or welfare is immediately threatened, the warden must respond through the regional office within 48 hours of receiving the complaint.

If you are confined to a non-Federal Institution and want to file a complaint about conditions or practices of the institution, follow the internal grievance procedure of the institution. In some prison systems it is necessary to file an institutional grievance before filing suit in Federal court.

Under the Civil Rights of Institutionalized Persons Act (CRIPA), the Attorney General is authorized to file suit on behalf of inmates at a given institution to redress systematic deprivations of inmates' constitutional rights. To file a complaint with the Attorney General, write to:

U.S. Department of Justice
Civil Rights Division
Special Litigation Section
PO Box 66400
Washington, DC 20035-6400
(202) 514-6255

Under the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), prisoners with disabilities, particularly prisoners with HIV, may have a right to participate in various services, programs, and activities. Complaints of discrimination under the ADA should be filed with the Department of Justice (for address, see page 30) within 180 days of the alleged discriminatory act.

Federally Assisted Programs

Discrimination on the basis of race, color, national origin, age, or disability in federally assisted programs is prohibited. This prohibition applies to recipients of Federal assistance and subrecipients. Discrimination on the basis of sex or religion is also prohibited in some federally assisted programs. Discrimination on the basis of sex is prohibited in all federally assisted education programs.

Laws barring discrimination because of race, color, national origin, or disability in federally assisted programs cover benefits and services provided by the program. As a result, recipients of Federal assistance may not discriminate to:

- deny an individual service, aid, or benefits;
- provide only inferior or discriminatory service, aid, or benefits;
- subject an individual to segregation or different treatment in relation to aid, service, or benefits;
- restrict or discourage individuals in their access to and usage of facilities;
- treat an individual differently in regard to eligibility for programs or services;
- use criteria that would impair accomplishment of the program's objectives or that would subject individuals to discrimination; or
- discriminate against an individual in any program or activity that is conducted in a facility constructed wholly or partly with Federal funds.

Laws barring discrimination in federally assisted programs usually do not cover employment by the program, unless: (1) a main purpose of the operation is to provide employment; or (2) discrimination in employment could cause discrimination in benefits or services; or (3) an allegation of disability discrimination is made.

In the event that employment is covered, you should file such a complaint with the Federal agency funding the program. Also, job discrimination is covered by other laws, and complaints should also be filed as described in the employment section of this publication. See page 15.

Laws barring discrimination in federally assisted programs are normally enforced by the agency that provides the assistance. If a recipient of Federal funds is found to be discriminating and refuses to come into compliance with the law, the Federal agency may terminate the funding to that recipient or refer the case to the Department of Justice for possible litigation.

Complaints alleging discrimination in federally assisted programs should generally be filed with the appropriate Federal agency within 180 days of the alleged discriminatory act. However, some agencies allow more time to file a complaint, while others allow as few as 90 days. You should check with the appropriate agency as quickly as possible if you believe you have been discriminated against. If you do not know which Federal agency may fund the program, but you believe it probably receives Federal assistance, you may file with the Coordination and Review Section of the Department of Justice (see page 41). That office will refer your complaint to the appropriate Federal agency.

Information on where to file complaints about federally assisted education, employment, housing, and law enforcement programs is contained in other sections of chapter 3.

Programs in agriculture, health and welfare, recreation, transportation, environmental control, and other fields are covered in this section.

Department of Agriculture

The Department of Agriculture handles complaints alleging discrimination in agricultural and rural programs. Some complaints that should be filed with the Department of Agriculture are:

- discrimination in Extension Programs, such as in 4-H club participation;
- discrimination in the Food Stamp Program, such as discrimination in distribution of food stamp benefits;
- discrimination in the Rural Rental Housing Program, such as biased eviction from a rural rental housing (apartment-style) complex because of lease violations;
- discrimination in Rural Utility Programs, such as in providing telephone, electric, or waste water facilities.

All of these programs are covered by laws or regulations prohibiting discrimination based on race, national origin, color, age, or disability. Housing programs are also covered by laws or regulations that prohibit discrimination based on marital and family status, and religion.

If you believe you have been discriminated against by one of the above programs or by any other program that receives assistance from the Department of Agriculture, send your complaint to:

Department of Energy

To conserve needed energy and aid those persons least able to afford higher utility costs, the Department of Energy's weatherization assistance program makes funds available to States, local governments, community action agencies, and, in certain instances, Native American tribal organizations to insulate the dwellings of low-income persons, especially the elderly and disabled. All low-income households are eligible to receive this assistance, which includes the making of furnace efficiency modifications and the installation of weatherization materials such as ceiling insulation, caulking, weather stripping, and storm windows.

If you think you have been discriminated against by a State or local government or by a community action agency in trying to get assistance under the weatherization program, write to:

U.S. Environmental Protection Agency

The Environmental Protection Agency provides financial assistance to State and local governments, tribal governments, and local education programs (this means any educational program or activity, not only those conducted by a formal educational institution) that deal, among others, with:

- pollution control and prevention;
- the development of municipal wastewater treatment facilities;
- the removal of asbestos from schools; or
- hazardous waste site identification, health risk assessment, and cleanup.

Allegations that residents of predominantly minority and low-income communities bear a disproportionate share of environmentally related health risks are investigated by the agency's external compliance program, which is managed in collaboration with the agency's Office of Environmental Justice.

Department of Health and Human Services

Many institutions and people receive funding from the Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS). Among them are:

- hospitals;
- nursing homes and extended care facilities;
- family health centers and clinics;
- alcohol and drug treatment centers;
- community mental health centers;
- physicians and other health professionals in private practice with patients assisted by medicaid;
- State agencies responsible for administering health care;
- State and local public assistance agencies;
- day care centers;
- adoption agencies;

- foster care homes;
- senior citizen centers;
- nutrition programs; and others.

If you believe you have been discriminated against by an entity receiving funds from the DHHS, send the complaint to a Regional Manager of the Office for Civil Rights or to:

Direct discrimination by a Federal agency in awarding grants to community organizations, governments, or others is not necessarily barred by Federal statutes. However, it is prohibited by the U.S. Constitution. Complaints should be filed with the agency responsible for the discriminatory act; if that agency does not act, you may have to file a lawsuit to protect your rights.

The Coordination and Review Section of the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice serves as the coordinator of enforcement by Federal agencies of all statutes that prohibit discrimination in programs that receive Federal financial assistance. If you think you have been discriminated against by an agency that receives Federal assistance and you don't know which agency to contact, write to the Coordination and Review Section at the address below:

Public Accommodations and Facilities

Federal law prohibits privately owned facilities that offer food, lodging, gasoline or entertainment to the public from discriminating on the basis of race, color, religion, or national origin. If you think that you have been discriminated against in using such a facility, you may file a complaint with the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice, or with the United States attorney in your area. In addition, you may file suit in the U.S. district court.

In addition, the Americans with Disabilities Act prohibits discrimination on the basis of disability in a wide range of places of public accommodation, including facilities that offer lodging, food, entertainment, sales or rental services, health care and other professional services, or recreation. If you feel that a place of public accommodation has discriminated against you on the basis of your disability, you should follow the procedures addressed on page 4.

There are also State laws that broadly prohibit discrimination on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, and disability in places of public accommodation. To determine whether your State has such a law, you should contact your State or local human rights agency, or your State attorney general's office.

Public facilities such as courthouses, jails, hospitals, parks, and other facilities owned and operated by State and local government entities cannot discriminate in their services because of race, color, religion, national origin, or disability. If you think a public facility has discriminated against you because of race, color, religion, or national origin, you may file suit in the U.S. district court or file a complaint with the nearest U.S. attorney's office.

People with disabilities cannot be discriminated against or excluded from services, programs, or activities offered by State or local governments. All public transportation systems must be accessible to people with disabilities, regardless of whether the system receives Federal financial assistance.

State and local governments must eliminate any eligibility criteria for participation in programs, activities, and services that screen out or tend to screen out persons with disabilities, unless the government can establish that the requirements are necessary for the provision of the service, program, or activity. In addition, public facilities must ensure that individuals with disabilities are not excluded from services, programs, or activities because buildings are inaccessible.

State and local agencies that provide emergency telephone services must provide "direct access" to individuals who rely on TTY or computer modems for telephone communication. Companies offering telephone services to the general public must offer telephone relay services to individuals who use TTYs or similar devices.

Discrimination complaints about public facilities (other than Architectural Barriers Act complaints) should be sent to:

- the Federal agency that provides funding to the facility subject to the complaint;
- the Federal agency designated to investigate complaints; or
- the Department of Justice.

Complaints can always be filed with the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice, which will refer your complaint to the appropriate agency.

Complaints regarding new construction of, or alterations to buildings or facilities funded by the Federal Government and subject to the Architectural Barriers Act of 1968 should be sent to:

Architectural and Transportation Barriers Compliance Board
Office of Compliance and Enforcement
1331 F St., NW, Suite 1000
Washington, DC 20004-1111
(202) 272-5434
1-800-872-2253
TTY: (202) 272-5449
Fax: (202) 272-5447

The Disability Rights Section of the Civil Rights Division of the U.S. Department of Justice handles complaints of discrimination based on disability in places of public accommodation, including all hotels, restaurants, retail stores, theaters, health care facilities, convention centers, parks, and places of recreation. To file a complaint of discrimination based on disability, call 1-800-514-0301 and send your complaint to:

U.S. Department of Justice
Civil Rights Division
Disability Rights Section
PO Box 66738
Washington, DC 20035-6738
(202) 307-2227
TDD: 1-800-514-0383
Fax: (202) 307-1198

If the Disability Rights Section of the Civil Rights Division believes that there is a pattern or practice of discrimination, or the complaint raises an issue of general public importance, it may attempt to negotiate a settlement of the matter, or bring an action in U.S. district court. Any such action would be taken on behalf of the United States. You also have the option of filing your own lawsuit in U.S. district court.

Voting

Federal laws prohibit discrimination in voting practices on the basis of race, color, previous condition of servitude, sex, disability, being a member of a language minority, or age if you are 18 years of age or older. The prohibition because of race or color is directed against the United States, State and local governments, and private organizations such as political parties. Your right to vote in general interest elections cannot be restricted by classifications on grounds other than residence, age, and citizenship, unless the classification serves a compelling State interest. General interest elections involve the voting on important governmental functions, such as imposition of property or sales taxes, maintenance of streets, operation of schools (including school board elections), and providing of sanitation, health, or welfare services.

The imposition by a State or voting district of a voting qualification, a prerequisite for registration or voting, or some other standard, practice, or procedure based on race, color, or membership in a language minority group that results in a denial of your right to vote or to participate in the processes leading to a nomination or election is forbidden by Federal laws. It is also forbidden to have as a prerequisite for voting that you demonstrate the ability to read, write, understand, or interpret any matter, demonstrate any educational achievement or knowledge of any particular subject, or possess good moral character. If you cannot read or write, voting officials are required to permit you to receive assistance from a person of your choice so that you can vote.

States may require you to provide some information, including identification information such as race, in order to determine your eligibility to vote and prevent voter fraud. A State may take away your right to vote if you are a convicted felon, but only as long as the purpose of the rule is not to disenfranchise you as a member of a minority group.

The Federal Government requires that a voter registration application be provided simultaneously with an application for, or renewal of, a driver's license or other personal identification document issued by a State motor vehicle authority. States are also required to provide registration materials by mail and in all public libraries, public schools, unemployment offices, Armed Forces recruitment offices, State offices that provide public assistance, and State-funded programs primarily engaged in providing services to those with disabilities.

If you are a member of a language minority and unable to participate effectively in English language elections, your State or voting district must provide you with registration and voting notices, forms, instructions, assistance, and other materials and information relating to the electoral process, including ballots, in English and in your language if your county has been determined to satisfy criteria contained in the minority language provisions of the Voting Rights Act.

As a safeguard against discrimination, jurisdictions covered under the special provisions of the Voting Rights Act must seek approval from either the Attorney General or the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia before making changes in voting practices or procedures. Also, the Attorney General is authorized to request that Federal observers be sent to such jurisdictions to monitor polling place activities on election day.

If you think you were discriminated against when you tried to vote or register to vote, immediately complain to local voting officials, and contact the nearest United States Attorney's Office (see page 90), or write to the Voting Section of the Civil Rights

Division of the Department of Justice at the address below. You should also complain if you were discriminated against in campaigning for office, or when you took part in a political meeting, signed up other voters, or served as an election official or poll watcher, or if you think a change in local voting laws has a discriminatory purpose or effect.

The Voting Section also safeguards the right to vote of the disabled and illiterate persons, overseas citizens, persons who change their residence shortly before a Presidential election, and persons 18 or older discriminated against because of their age. The U.S. Attorney General may bring a civil action in Federal district court to enforce your right to vote. As a private individual, you may also bring a civil action to remedy discriminatory behavior.

4. Special Circumstances

Lack of Citizenship

The Constitution protects, to some extent, people in this country who are not citizens from arbitrary denial of rights.

Discrimination in employment, education, and social services are some areas of concern to noncitizens.

If you are discriminated against in employment, you may file a complaint at the Office of Special Counsel for Immigration Related Unfair Employment Practices of the Department of Justice within 180 days of the discriminatory action if you are a:

- legal permanent resident who filed for citizenship within 6 months of becoming eligible,
- legal temporary resident,
- refugee, or
- asylee.

You are also protected against national origin discrimination, a refusal to accept proper identity papers or a work authorization or both, or unlawful retaliation, as in hiring, recruitment, referral for a fee, or discharge.

Citizenship discrimination covers employers with four or more employees.

You should send a complaint to:

Office of Special Counsel for Immigration Related Unfair Employment Practices
PO Box 27728
Washington, DC 20038-7728
(202) 616-5528
Employer hot line 1-800-255-8155
Employee hot line 1-800-255-7688
Fax: (202) 616-5509

or to a district office of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, listed on page 77. Lack of citizenship discrimination is not always a basis for a complaint of illegal discrimination (see page 20), since the hiring of illegal aliens is prohibited.

Recent changes in welfare and immigration laws have shifted the administration of need-based social programs and medicaid to the States. These changes now allow States to withhold assistance from persons who are not citizens, subject to certain exemptions for refugees or asylees who have resided in the U.S. for 5 years or less; aliens serving or who have served in the military (and their spouses and dependent children); and permanent legal residents who have worked lawfully in the U.S. for at least 10 years. In addition, the new laws make permanent legal residents ineligible to receive food stamps or SSI assistance, unless they have lawfully worked in the U.S. for at least 10 years.

To find out what benefits you may be eligible to receive, contact your State's Department of Human Services or the proper office of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, listed on page 65.

Regardless of citizenship status, if you believe you or your child has been discriminated against by a public elementary or secondary school, you should contact the U.S. Department of Education listed on page 13.

Native Americans

Through the Indian Civil Rights Act of 1968 (ICRA), Congress statutorily imposed on tribal governments provisions similar to those found in the Bill of Rights. Commonly known as the Indian Bill of Rights, the ICRA provides protections similar, but not identical, to those provided by the U.S. Constitution.

Tribal forums are available to enforce rights created by the ICRA. Federal courts do not oversee tribal compliance with the ICRA, except in cases of habeas corpus.

The American Indian Religious Freedom Act declares that a lack of clear and adequate legal protection for the religious use of peyote by Indians might serve to stigmatize Indian tribes and cultures and increase the risk that they would be exposed to discriminatory treatment. On that basis, the act preserves Indians' rights to the sacramental use of peyote.

Likewise, a 1994 Presidential memorandum recognizes the sacred place of eagle feathers in Native American culture and religious practices and provides easier access to scarce eagle carcasses and parts.

Civil rights laws passed by Congress protect all citizens, including Native Americans and non-Native Americans. Therefore, any Native American can bring a discrimination complaint if he or she suffers discrimination on account of race, color, creed, religion, sex, or national origin with respect to housing, employment, commercial transactions, or access to public accommodations.

If you think you have been discriminated against because you are a Native American, you should file a complaint with the appropriate agency listed in chapter 3 of this booklet. In addition, you should write to:

U.S. Department of Justice
Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights
PO Box 65808

Institutionalized Persons

The Department of Justice protects your rights if you are an individual confined in certain institutions owned or operated by or on behalf of a State or local government. These institutions include facilities for the mentally ill and developmentally disabled, nursing homes for the elderly, prisons and jails, and detention halls for juveniles.

If you have a complaint send it to:

Military Personnel

If you are in the U.S. Navy and have a discrimination complaint about an aspect of military life, it should be handled through the chain of command.

If you are in the U.S. Army or Marine Corps, discrimination complaints are handled through the chain of command and inspector general channels.

If you are in the U.S. Air Force, a discrimination complaint should first be taken up with your supervisor or commander. If it is not resolved to your satisfaction, you should contact the equal opportunity and treatment officer or the noncommissioned officer at your wing or base social actions office.

If you are in any branch of the armed services and are discriminated against in off-base housing, contact your post or base housing referral office. If the discriminatory act took place in the United States, you should also file a complaint with the Department of Housing and Urban Development (see page 27).
